All markers should read this to clarify certain questions raised at the National Memorandum Discussion.

1. How do markers mark learners who have written a piece in the wrong tense?

The panel concluded that at this level, a piece that has been written in the wrong tense must not be penalised in terms of content. The penalty should be applied in the language and style part of the rubric and it was stated that the penalty should not be excessive, especially if the learner who has written in the wrong tense, has used the tense correctly.

2. How should learners be marked if they have understood the topic well and their content is good but their grammar is weak.

Once again, markers must use the rubric and mark content, grammar and style separately. Markers must select the most appropriate blocks in the rubric for each particular section.

3. How should learners be marked when they have used the wrong format for a particular piece? For example, they have written a dialogue instead of an essay.

The panel indicated that the penalty should be applied under the section where format is indicated. See the following:

Section A: Format will be found under “Structure” for 5 marks

Section B: Format will be found under “Content, planning and Format”. 10 marks for content, 2 marks for planning and 2 marks for format.

Section C: Format will be found under “Content, planning and Format”. 10 marks for content, 2 marks for planning and 2 marks for format.

4. How should the directions (3.3) be marked?

The panel said that markers must follow each instruction given by the learner and use the map to see whether the instructions make sense or not. Pupils should be awarded marks for content (were they able to give the correct directions) and then also marks for the grammar used. The rubric should be used accordingly.

5. What if a learner has no rough work?

Learners should show rough work and there should be a correlation between the rough work and the final product. Each section will have its own allocation for rough work.

Section A: Content - 24

Planning (rough work) - 4

Language, style, editing - 7

Structure - 5 (look at sentences, paragraphs and format ie. Essay format).

Section B: Language, Planning + Format- Content 10 marks

- Planning (rough) 2 marks
- Format 2 marks eg. Letter friendly / formal.

Language, Style + editing - 6 marks

Section C: Language, Planning + Format- Content 10 marks

- Planning (rough) 2 marks
- Format 2 marks eg. Postcard, recipe, directions.

Language, Style + editing - 6 marks
